Chapter 1 by tilde

Birds have their own colors flowers has their own colors cakes has their own colors but what color is real? Dogs see black and white and we see every color or we think we see every color but do we do?

Chapter 2 by alexander2003

Colors is good thing to see because its very important for the future...

Chapter 3 by 20hupj

Everything sees things in a different color. How are we to tell if the color blue I see, is the same as the blue you see? How can you describe a color, it's shades and the way it catches the light?

Which colors are correct, is there true color?

What color is the sky really? What color is the leaf that has floated down from a tree in Autumn?

Which colors are real and which are wrong? Only he knows.

Chapter 4 by nikkinjg

In the middle of the forest a tree bleeds red. No one is there to see the tree bleed red. Does the tree still bleed red since no one was there to see it?

Chapter 6 by intellikat

As I read the lines of text, my eyes bled. Bled red. Bled for the lack of a plotline. For character development.

I fell in the middle of the living room and no one was there to hear me.

When I woke, I found I could now see ultraviolet light.

Chapter 7 by jeffyb

We don't need character development or a plot line...just COLORS! It is important for our future.

Chapter 8 by intellikat

Ahem... I could now see ultraviolet light.

I lived beneath the city. The sewers. The refuse. The stink and filth that those above had made my home by discarding it through various means.

I lived to protect them. Those who knew not that I even existed, but whose lives would be less without me. Whose FUTURE would be denied without my battling the forces seeking to end the human race. Inter-dimensional beings I had battled for centuries.

For I was... the HUMAN BEE.
